When 'different' becomes 'dangerous'

Monday, November 05, 2012

My Magical Palace by Kunal Mukherjee takes us to the other side of the gay realm, and has us see what transpires in the life of a male who is fascinated by all things male. Rahul has grown up with a crush on Rajesh Khanna. The obsession with the stars lips, and romantic gestures, has him fantasizing about intimacies with him, and natural progression in this kind of thinking has him yearning for the brother of a classmate.

The brother is 'greek god' handsome and even has a girlfriend, but that not deter him from noticing Rahul's vulnerability. Even as he enjoys the thrill of kissing the girl, he takes Rahul to the changing room after football practice, and there introduces him to the pleasures of man with man, with the hugs, the rubs, the thrill of sweaty bodies and male smells. For Rahul, this is a heady experience, and he longs for more.

He has grown up being more in the company of his sister's friends, and the girls and women who visit the expansive home in Hyderabad that his father has occupied by virtue of being a government official. It was once a palace but was abandoned before being lived in because a dead bat discovered there was deemed a bad omen.

The story of Rahul coming of age and understanding himself, is played against other peripheral stories in the book. Discovering that being a girlish boy can bring in problems of ragging, and seeing a classmate being sacked and treated with electric shocks for writing a love letter to another boy is scary.

There is Mallika, the daughter of family friends, who falls in love with a Muslim boy, and Rahul and his sister witness the budding romance, before the romance is discovered and the girl is sent off, to be married off later to a man of the parent's choice. The Muslim boy is beaten for approaching them with his own suit. The backdrop has Hindu-Muslim tensions over the demand for more land for expansion of a dargah, that too from what is perceived as temple land. This seals the fate of the lovers even more strongly.

This all is recounted by Rahul to his lover Andrew in the US, who breaks off after coming to know that Rahul is in the midst of interviewing the girls being sent to him by his parents who are planning an arranged marriage.
